Douglass Organization for Occupational and Related Educational Services, Inc. (DOORS) is a parent-run organization which provides funding for various social, educational, and recreational services for students of DDDC, located on the Douglass College campus of Rutgers University. These programs are essential to the total growth of an individual with autism. Traditionally, however, these kinds of programs don't often receive funding from state or local agencies, so DOORS was founded to fill the funding gap. The Rutgers - Douglass Developmental Disabilities Center (DDDC) exists to meet the needs of people with autism spectrum disorders and their families. We recognize that it is our responsibility to work collaboratively with the families of the children and adults we serve. We are committed to furthering the understanding of the nature and treatment of autism through research.
